“I collaborate with my clients to help them achieve their business goals. Some of my clients seek a detailed analysis of legal rights of others so they can have the freedom to operate within a crowded field. Some wish to create their own set of patent rights to prevent copying. Others don’t exactly know what they want, and we work together to implement an Intellectual Property strategy for competitive advantage.”

Kevin Ross is an experienced patent prosecutor with broad experience in all types of intellectual property. Start-up companies regularly seek Kevin’s seasoned counsel in protecting their core IP, while larger companies leverage Kevin’s international experience to help develop and manage worldwide patent portfolios. Kevin has helped clients secure patents in the U.S., Canada, Europe, India, China, Japan, Korea, Russia, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Macau, Australia, and New Zealand. His international patent experience also includes living abroad—helping Italian companies obtain U.S. patents while also learning procedures and practice of the European Patent Office.

With regard to U.S. intellectual property matters, Kevin is skilled in all phases of patent prosecution, including invention harvesting, drafting patents on time and on budget, appeals, inter partes and ex partes re-examination, reissue, and post-grant opposition. He has led several patent due diligence investigations and has drafted numerous freedom to operate, validity, invalidity, infringement, and non-infringement opinions.

Before entering the field of intellectual property law, Kevin was a computer application programmer for a Fortune-50 company where he designed and coded management information tools deployed in over 26 regional offices across the U.S. His graduate school education in electrical engineering was primarily focused on circuit design as well as semiconductor physics and methods of semiconductor fabrication.
