“I am a creative problem-solver who strives to understand my clients’ businesses and industries in order to work seamlessly as a valued member of their team. I’m known for my responsiveness, adept contract drafting and negotiating skill, and ability to provide industry-specific counsel to clients in unique, innovative, or highly regulated fields.

Nic Mayne is an associate on the firm’s business law team. Nic focuses on reviewing, drafting, and negotiating a wide variety of contracts for businesses, individuals, and educational institutions, including IP licenses and assignments (influencer and athlete name, image and likeness agreements, among others); manufacturing, distribution and supply agreements; sponsorship, signage and venue-related agreements; contractor, consulting and employment agreements; and contracts relating to buying and selling equity in various businesses. Nic also works with business owners and executives on choice-of-entity and formation issues and assists more established clients throughout the M&A process with a variety of transaction-related agreements.

Nic comes from a background in sports, entertainment, and advertising, and continues to work with athletes, artists, teams, leagues, venues, educational institutions, and sponsors in an outside counsel role, applying his unique experiences to various business, contract, and employment issues that these clients face. He was previously certified by the National Hockey League Players’ Association to represent professional hockey players in their negotiations with NHL teams, and has worked with NHL stars on playing contract, endorsement, salary arbitration, and disciplinary hearing issues, in addition to advising on NCAA regulatory compliance and assisting athletes throughout their careers and in retirement with business and nonprofit ventures. Nic has also counseled athletes in professional golf, football, and Olympic sport on sponsorship agreements and general business issues and has worked with brands on the sponsor side of influencer, signage, naming rights, and presenting sponsor agreements. On the entertainment front, Nic has worked with venues and producers on performance contracts and has worked with talent on publishing, licensing, and endorsement agreements as well as agreements related to television and film appearances and agreements. Nic is also trusted by clients to provide counsel on various advertising law issues, such as compliance issues relating to general claim substantiation and ad clearance, contests and sweepstakes, FTC regulations, Olympic rule compliance, and team, league, and players' union policies.

Before joining Miller Nash, Nic worked for two leading NHL player agencies, first in the corporate partnerships space, and later as a player agent. He has also worked on the team side, interning with the General Counsel of the NHL's Arizona Coyotes throughout law school.

While in law school, Nic was a chair on Harvard's Committee on Sports and Entertainment Law, volunteered as a mediator in local courts, and was also an active member of the Harvard Law Entrepreneurship Project, in which he counseled start-ups on entity formation, intellectual property protection, and advertising law issues.

Prior to pursuing his law degree, Nic founded a marketing agency, serving sports industry clients, social media influencers, and business owners in a variety of professional services and trades. His entrepreneurial spirit and business experience is valued by start-up clients, growing businesses, and entrepreneurial individuals. The insights Nic gained through experience allow him to better understand his clients' goals and work collaboratively to achieve them.
