“I strive to help clients achieve their objectives by facilitating ethical and efficient solutions to labor and employment issues. Whether disputes are resolved through negotiation, arbitration, or litigation, my advocacy is guided by the knowledge that many relationships will outlast the current dispute.”

Trevor Caldwell represents public and private employers in labor relations and employment law matters. His labor relations practice focuses on negotiating collective bargaining agreements, contract administration, arbitration, and representing clients before state and federal agencies. Trevor counsels employers of all sizes and across a variety of industries on a multitude of employment-related issues. He uses a proactive approach, including employment advice, counseling, and training, to assist employers in crafting solutions that are best suited to their unique workplaces. Trevor frequently provides trainings for business owners, managers, and employees on topics such as harassment and discrimination, documentation practices, workplace investigations, and union organizing.

Before joining Miller Nash, Trevor practiced at a boutique law firm in Portland, exclusively representing employers in all areas of labor and employment law. Trevor previously served on active duty as a captain in the U.S. Army and has been a member of the Oregon National Guard since leaving active duty. He currently serves as an attorney in the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate (JAG).
