“I am committed to gaining a deep understanding of my clients’ businesses to help them achieve their goals amidst rapidly evolving regulations.”

Tyler Bowlin is a skilled legal adviser and problem-solver, supporting clients that operate in highly regulated sectors covering environmental law, petroleum, cannabis, hemp, and alcoholic beverages, among others. His knowledge of cannabis, hemp, and liquor laws spans California, Oregon, and Washington statutes—a region known for leading and cultivating the policies that govern these industries.

Tyler’s broad environmental practice includes advice on issues related to contaminated sites, water, air, waste, and environmental impact/land use. From performing leak-detection and repair services on oil fields throughout California to advising on one of the largest environmental cleanup projects in the United States, his experience at both the field and executive levels of environmental compliance gives him a comprehensive understanding of environmental law.

Tyler regularly represents clients before state and federal agencies as well as specialized regulatory bodies, including California’s Department of Toxic Substances Control; Division of Oil, Gas, and Geothermal Resources; Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control; Bureau of Cannabis Control; various Regional Water Quality Control Boards; regional air quality management districts; and others. He has litigated complex disputes for global companies, including national and regional businesses, from the beginning through to the end of the litigation cycle, as well as helping clients mitigate risks and liabilities. Tyler also assists with matters relating to admiralty and maritime law, including arrests and attachments.
