Nathaniel Levy is an associate on the firm’s real estate and business law teams, with particular focus on serving national and community banks as well as clients in the real estate and cannabis industries.

Nat regularly represents clients, including developers and public and nonprofit entities, in purchase and sale transactions and in the disposition of large real estate portfolios. In this regard, he has prepared and helped negotiate dozens of purchase and sale agreements, reviewed title reports and due diligence, and managed escrow closings. He also has considerable understanding of issues in commercial leasing, including Class A office space and cannabis retail, processing, and production, and has advised clients in specific leasing transactions and amendments as well as prepared forms for clients’ repeated use. Nat has also drafted easements and other recorded real property agreements for various situations, particularly for construction, access, and utilities in connection with real property development.

Nat frequently works with both national and community banks and borrowers in real estate loan transactions. His work includes preparing and reviewing loan documents, title and survey review, drafting and negotiating ancillary documents including landlord and franchising consents and agreements, preparing opinion letters, and escrow closings.

He has also represented business clients in a variety of transactions and situations, including asset and stock purchases and sales, entity formation and governance, maritime vessel chartering and sales, and international distribution agreements. Related to these matters, Nat has reviewed due diligence materials, prepared bylaws and operating agreements, and advised on potentially applicable laws of foreign jurisdictions.

During law school, Nat served as an executive editor for the Willamette Law Review and was class valedictorian. Prior to law school, he spent three years as a civil litigation legal assistant. He joined Miller Nash in 2017 as a summer associate.
