“When clients need litigation counsel, they are often facing a difficult challenge personally or in their business, and commonly it’s both. I believe that it’s an attorney’s responsibility to help ease those concerns, to understand what the client’s ultimate goals are, and to find the most efficient and practical way to achieve those goals. During difficult times good counsel matters most.”

Drew Duggan is a litigator with the Miller Nash construction and real estate teams. Drew helps corporate and individual clients in commercial and residential real estate disputes, commercial leasing matters, and construction disputes of all sizes. He knows that when problems arise with a project or a property, clients most often want the fastest solution to get their business back on track. In addition to his real estate and construction practice, Drew also litigates a variety of maritime and admiralty claims. He has extensive courtroom experience, having tried multiple civil and criminal, jury and bench trials.

Drew’s previous experience includes positions as a legal honors clerk for the general counsel for the Secretary of Defense at the Pentagon, as a legal clerk at the King County Prosecutor’s Office, and as a trial fellow at the King County Prosecutor’s Office.

Before attending the University of Washington, Drew served in the United States Army as an Army Ranger, a non-commissioned officer in the Infantry, and conducted combat tours in Afghanistan and Iraq.
