“I approach client-interactions much like a contractor approaches a project—identify the desired end goal, determine more nuanced goals specific to each party involved, craft a plan to achieve the client’s goals, then bring my unique skill set to bear in carrying out that plan. I am motivated by the well-being and happiness of clients and strive to be an integral part of their diverse business needs.”

Scott MacDonald focuses on public and private construction contracting and all areas of construction litigation. He represents owners, general contractors, subcontractors, and construction suppliers throughout the Pacific Northwest on any project, whether it be heavy civil infrastructure work, road and utility projects, apartments, condominiums, affordable housing efforts, schools, hotels, or residential work. Scott is well-versed in structuring and negotiating contracts for traditional project delivery methods, as well as alternative delivery methods such as GC/CM and design-build projects. When in the best interests of clients, he is a stalwart force in formal dispute resolution, but also carries a solution-focused suite of skills to ensure disputes reach the desired outcome.
