“Clients come to me because they have a problem that they need help solving, and I take that responsibility very seriously. I listen to my clients to understand the issues and obstacles they are facing, and then develop and execute a strategy that is bespoke to each client’s circumstances. I aim to provide practical advice that clients understand and can use to keep doing business the way they want to while mitigating risks that may arise along the way.”

Andy Murphy is a versatile litigator whose practice focuses on disputes involving highly regulated industries, particularly the cannabis industry. Andy has led on industry-shaping impact litigation, constitutional issues of first impression, and bet-the-company litigation in addition to providing the everyday advice that clients need to run their businesses.

Andy has a depth of experience in administrative litigation, particularly regulatory enforcement actions brought by the Washington State Liquor and Cannabis Board as well as land use appeals. Andy also represents businesses and individuals seeking relief from government entities, such as striking laws as unconstitutional, and recovering large damage awards.

Andy’s broad commercial litigation experience enables him to advise his clients on a wide range of issues. He is experienced in resolving matters involving partnership disputes, employment law, municipal law, company dissolution, contract interpretation, product liability, intellectual property, class actions, and state and federal constitutional law.

Before becoming a lawyer, Andy ran a nonprofit organization dedicated to chronic pain patient advocacy and eliminating prescription-drug-related unintentional overdose deaths.
