“I work with clients to solve problems efficiently, keeping their goals and budget expectations in mind. I tailor my legal advice to a client’s needs and use my experienced judgment and creativity to find solutions and return value. Communication, effective advocacy, and innovative solutions are the keys to a successful outcome.”

Jim Yand’s practice focuses on resolving challenges involved in construction and property development. Challenges often arise from competing interests in allocating risk and responsibility in the complex supply chain for bringing new projects out of the ground. Jim has more than 30 years of experience resolving high-conflict cases that often determine the continued success of the client’s project or business. His representation across the construction chain also allows him to craft and litigate contract terms that achieve the most effective results. This work also extends to serving as outside counsel for various trade groups and advising on a range of business questions that arise. Jim is a frequent author and speaker on various construction industry topics.
