“Litigation need not be an adversarial or challenging process. I endeavor—through careful listening and thoughtful dialogue—to help clients find resolutions that serve their entities in a positive way consistent with their core values and allow them to get back to the day-to-day tasks that are their mission and focus.”

Melissa Rawlinson is an attorney on Miller Nash’s education team, focusing on litigation and representing higher education institutions (community colleges, colleges, and universities), K-12 institutions, public school districts, and private schools in state and federal court. She works with the firm’s education clients on a range of matters that affect their students, administrators, educators, and employees. Melissa defends education clients in disputes involving race, gender, and age discrimination, disability discrimination and accommodation issues, wage and hour claims, wrongful discharge, retaliation, as well as general tort and contract claims.

Melissa joined Miller Nash first as a summer clerk, then as a litigation associate where she participated in trials, arbitrations, and mediations related to complex business and employment matters. She took an extended leave of absence from the firm to focus on raising her three daughters. During her leave, she volunteered and served in multiple leadership roles with educational institutions and youth and student activity groups, gaining valuable experience that now guides and informs her practice serving educational clients. Miller Nash welcomed Melissa back to the firm in 2021 as special counsel on its employment and education teams.
