“I am committed to providing thoughtful and thorough advice while working towards a resolution that prioritizes each client’s unique goals and circumstances.”

Eden Vasquez is an associate on the firm’s education, employment, and traditional labor law teams. Eden assists public and private employers in Oregon and Washington, by providing general employment advice, assisting in navigating labor relations and collective bargaining, and advising on potential or active litigation matters.

Traditional Labor Law

As a member of the traditional labor law team, Eden regularly negotiates collective bargaining agreements for public and private employers and publicly traded companies, including serving as the lead negotiator for clients bargaining first contracts and providing direct at-the-table and behind-the-scenes support during successor negotiations. Eden guides employers during union organizing campaigns as well as advises on how to best manage their union-represented workforce. Eden also provides advice and counsel to public and private employers related to contract administration, grievances, unfair labor practices, and arbitration. Eden represents employers before the Oregon Employment Relations Board and National Labor Relations Board. Eden works with clients across a variety of industries, including higher and K-12 education, government and public entities, construction, manufacturing, cannabis, healthcare, sports and entertainment, and nonprofit and charitable organizations.

Litigation

Eden maintains an active litigation and appellate practice, appearing in federal and state court on behalf of employers defending employment matters related to breach of contract disputes (including enforceability of restrictive covenants, confidentiality, and nondisclosure agreements), federal and state discrimination, harassment, and retaliation claims, wage and hour compliance, and other tort claims.
