“I assist our clients by providing detail-oriented and efficient support. Additionally, my background in environmental science has given me valuable insight into some of the issues our clients face.”

Alisha Till is a paralegal with background education in environmental science who supports the renewable energy and environmental practice groups. Alisha has over six years of experience assisting attorneys with legal research, drafting and filing motions and pleadings in multiple venues, managing large volumes of complex discovery, and providing detailed proofreading and reviewing support. She has familiarity working in regulatory proceedings before state and federal administrative courts, having assisted with cases before the Public Utility Commission of Oregon, Washington Utilities and Transportation Commission, Idaho Public Utilities Commission, Wyoming Public Service Commission, Regulatory Commission of Alaska, Energy Facility Siting Council, and Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Prior to joining Miller Nash, Alisha worked for a local boutique firm where she gained important industry knowledge on energy, environmental, and telecommunications law.
