“I work diligently with clients to understand their goals and to find the best resolution for each case.”

Cristela Delgado-Daniel is an attorney on Miller Nash’s education team, representing public and private higher education and K-12 institutions. She defends education clients in student, employment, and labor disputes. She also represents school districts in special education matters under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, and the Americans with Disabilities Act. In addition to active litigation, she advises employers on matters related to wage and hour, discrimination, harassment, and retaliation. Cristela regularly defends employers in connection with charges filed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), the Oregon Bureau of Labor and Industries (BOLI), and the Employment Relations Board (ERB).

Cristela is also an independent investigator and conducts investigations related to harassment; race and gender discrimination; and Title IX. She holds a certificate from the Association of Workplace Investigators, an organization dedicated to promoting and enhancing the quality of impartial workplace investigations.

Prior to private practice, Cristela clerked for the Honorable Steven R. Powers with the Oregon Court of Appeals where she assisted in drafting judicial opinions that resolved legal questions spanning both state and federal law.
