“As I help clients litigate disputes or steer through complicated statutes and regulations, I take great care to understand their unique circumstances and specific goals. Along the way, I provide clear, actionable advice to get clients where they want to go.”

Adrian Anderson is an associate on the firm’s litigation team. He has experience analyzing legal and factual issues in complex civil litigation, including in cases involving contract, tax, and constitutional claims. Adrian also has assisted clients with regulatory matters. He draws on half of a decade of work as a congressional aide to make sense of statutes and government policies.

Adrian joined Miller Nash after serving as a career law clerk to Chief Judge Elaine D. Kaplan at the U.S. Court of Federal Claims. Before clerking, Adrian worked in the Washington, D.C. office of an international law firm. He began his career as a classroom assistant and high school teacher in Oregon.

Representative Experience

Real Estate Litigation

- Helped secure a multimillion-dollar arbitration award for a real estate development company in a lease dispute with a commercial tenant.

Personal Activities

Adrian grew up on the north Oregon coast. He visits there often with his wife and young children to hike, clam, and build sandcastles.
