“Clients turn to me when business disputes become strategically important. I help clients navigate complex litigation by combining practical business judgment with thoughtful strategy and persuasive advocacy. Whether resolving a case through negotiation, dispositive motion practice, or trial, I remain focused on achieving efficient, practical results that advance our clients’ business objectives.”

John Clarke represents businesses, financial institutions, closely held companies, executives, and public entities in commercial disputes throughout the Pacific Northwest and Arizona. He advises clients in high-stakes litigation involving corporate governance, shareholder disputes, class actions, financial services, securities, intellectual property, and other business torts in state and federal courts, arbitration, and administrative proceedings.

John works closely with clients to develop litigation strategies that align with their broader business objectives. Whether pursuing an early dismissal, managing complex discovery, preparing key witnesses, or preparing a case for trial, he focuses on positioning each matter for the strongest possible outcome while minimizing unnecessary disruption to the client’s business. Clients frequently rely on John to develop early case strategy, evaluate litigation risk, and guide business-critical disputes from pre-suit negotiations through trial and appeal.

John has represented clients in some of their most significant business disputes, including shareholder and corporate governance disputes, consumer and securities class actions, complex commercial litigation, and regulatory proceedings. He has successfully obtained dismissals of multimillion-dollar claims, prevailed on dispositive motions in state and federal courts, and helped clients resolve business-critical disputes through litigation, arbitration, and negotiated resolution.

John is also deeply committed to public service. As former cochair of Miller Nash’s Pro Bono Committee, he helped lead the firm’s pro bono program to a 32% increase in pro bono hours while expanding opportunities to serve immigrant communities and other underserved Oregonians. He continues to maintain an active pro bono practice and serves on the boards of several nonprofit and civic organizations dedicated to strengthening Oregon’s legal and civic communities.
