“I apply my passion for learning to deeply understand clients’ industries and their legal needs in order to provide high-quality work product and legal advice. I advocate zealously to achieve clients’ goals while maintaining professionalism, integrity, and decency.”

Brett Palmer is an associate on the firm’s environmental team. He focuses his practice on complex commercial litigation, and his experience includes supporting client intake/investigation, conducting legal research, drafting pleadings, managing discovery and motion practice, supporting hearings, and reaching dispute resolution. Clients benefit from Brett’s natural curiosity and his aptitude to quickly understand an organization’s business priorities and then use this knowledge to successfully navigate legal challenges.

Prior to joining Miller Nash, Brett worked as an attorney with the California Public Utilities Commission where he handled a variety of cases including ratesetting for water and telecommunications utilities, investigations and citations against major electric utilities, and safety enforcement matters against railroad utilities. Brett also led the Commission’s Interagency Solar Consumer Protection Taskforce. In this capacity, Brett helped to enact California’s 2022 rooftop solar regulatory reforms and advised electric utilities, rooftop solar providers, and solar industry associations on compliance with these reforms, and coordinated with other California state agencies, including the California State Licensing Board and the Department of Financial Protection and Innovation to implement and enforce the reforms.
