“I assist our clients by providing detail-oriented and efficient support across litigation, real estate, and energy and environmental matters.”

Alisha Till brings a background in environmental science and over eight years of experience supporting complex legal matters to the litigation, real estate, and energy and environmental practice groups at Miller Nash. Her work includes managing large volumes of discovery, including document review and discovery database coordination; conducting legal research; cite-checking and reviewing motions, briefs, and other litigation documents for accuracy; conducting title and survey review for real estate matters; and coordinating with experts and analyzing data across matters. She has experience in litigation, personal injury, construction, real estate, and energy and environmental law.

Prior to joining Miller Nash, Alisha worked for a local boutique firm where she gained important industry knowledge on energy, environmental, and telecommunications law.
