“I am a creative problem-solver who understands and appreciates how legal decisions and strategies will impact the goals of mission-driven entities. I strive to provide all clients with practical solutions.”

Souvanny Miller represents municipalities, special districts, and other public entities across the Pacific Northwest in a broad range of municipal and public law matters. She works closely with city managers, governing boards, and leadership teams to provide practical guidance on governance, public meetings and records laws, public contracting, First Amendment issues, regulatory compliance, and other operational matters affecting public agencies. Souvanny also advises on zoning, planning, and other land use issues, including reviewing staff reports, advising during hearings, and handling appeals to the Land Use Board of Appeals (LUBA).

A significant part of Souvanny’s practice involves working directly with public entity leadership and elected officials to support effective decision-making and long-term planning. She regularly attends hearings and city council meetings, including executive sessions, and collaborates with agency leadership to streamline internal processes, develop policies and municipal code provisions, and ensure compliance with state and federal requirements, including those related to public funding and FEMA floodplain regulations.

Souvanny maintains an active litigation practice and represents public bodies in disputes involving land use, governance, contracts, and other public law issues. She guides clients through administrative proceedings as well as litigation in state and federal courts. Souvanny is also a valued member of the condemnation team, as she plays a vital role in assisting clients with eminent domain, inverse condemnation, and regulatory takings.

Earlier in her career, Souvanny advised educational institutions on the development and implementation of Title IX policies and served as a judicial extern for the Honorable Michael H. Simon at the U.S. District Court for the District of Oregon. Across her practice, she is committed to helping public sector clients navigate complex legal and regulatory environments with practical, solutions-oriented counsel.
